

Academic Resilience – How can your school do better?

Staff Audit exercise

Guidance Notes:

This audit is a simple tool designed to be used as a staff exercise. It is for ALL staff to participate in – the more the better. Ideally you would run this as part of an InSET session and invite the teaching and support staff, plus as many others as you can e.g. maintenance, catering, admin, governors etc

The exercise will help;

- Engage and help all staff to understand the kinds of things that promote Academic Resilience for vulnerable pupils in school
- Get a sense of how well you are doing within school in relation to the evidence base (what works) in promoting Academic Resilience
- Gather together in one place all the good practice already happening in school
- Generate ideas and develop action plans for improvement

The idea is to promote discussion and reflective thinking. We suggest it's a good pre-OfSTED-visit exercise because the areas you are enquiring about are evidence based in terms of what actually works. It shows commitment to closing the gap for those who are disadvantaged not just through teaching and learning but a broad range of strategies – on both a whole school and interpersonal level.

What to do;

1. Introduce the exercise: give a brief overview of academic resilience, why you are trying to boost it within school, and the purpose of this exercise (you can use the Resilience Zap materials to help you).
2. Remember to acknowledge that good practice already happening in school but keeping track of all those pockets of activity is difficult. This is not a new fad or more performance measures...much of the approach is about endorsing the common sense things we can do with vulnerable pupils or as some teachers have called it 'going back to why I became a teacher stuff'.
3. To cut down time, ask small groups to focus on a different sections; this will encourage lots of discussion – essential in order to generate ideas.
4. Ask someone in each group to record the discussion. Emphasise that you can't follow up ideas if they haven't been written down.
5. Collate the answers, and use them to form the basis of your action planning. Don't forget to let staff know the outcomes and next steps.

NOTE; this exercise was designed as part of a wider whole school audit to gather other views across the school community. However, even if you just did this one thing with staff you will come up with good stuff to build on.

There is also a slightly different audit for your senior leadership team which covers more on policy, leadership and governance. The 'added value' of doing both is that you can compare staff RAG rating with the school's leaderships'. Discrepancies can be very revealing...
